Anza-Borrego Desert State Park is the largest contiguous State Park in the continental U.S., and arguably the most diverse. Here, in stunning full color photographs, is the entire range of the Park's ecosystems, presented as a journey from the high country down to the palm oasis, back up to pine and oak forests, and down again through the badlands. The scenes and vistas include desert landscapes, but also feature alpine forests, marshes, and meadows, as well as the Park's justly famous wildflowers.
